

MRS. PHOEBUS AGAIN A BRIDE

Divorced Wife of Frank Phoebus Weds Former Lieutenant Oakes.

SHE WAS A GREAT BELLE

Lieutenant Oakes Recently Re-signed His Commission Under a Cloud.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)
NORFOLK, Va., Sept. 19.—Nellie P. Phoebus, the divorced wife of Frank Phoebus, of Elizabeth City county, and Jean Sullivan Oakes, formerly a lieutenant in the United States army at Fort Monroe, were married in Norfolk at 3 o'clock this morning, after a hard struggle to find a clerk to issue them a license and then a minister to make them man and wife.

Young Oakes is of a very prominent Ohio family, and has had an interesting career. He was once a navy paymaster, but lost his commission. At the outbreak of the Spanish war he enlisted in the Two Hundred and Third New York Regiment; saw service in Porto Rico and attached to the staff of General Davis. He was transferred as a lieutenant in artillery to Old Point, but high life around that resort caused him to resign under a cloud.

WAS A GREAT BELLE.
Mrs. Oakes was Nellie Daugherty, and was the belle of the old Hygeia for many seasons.

At that time she was one of the most beautiful women in Virginia. She married Frank Phoebus, of Phoebus, Va., but unhappiness came, was followed by separation and finally Mr. Phoebus was granted a divorce.

Mr. and Mrs. Oakes and Nellie Yeager are at the Gladstone Hotel, and are not at all averse to talking about their romance. "I hid everything about it, Jean, and then, please, don't say anything more about it than you have to," said Mrs. Oakes. The husband was inclined to leave the talking to the bride and Mrs. Oakes said: "Well, there is not much to it. We came over here on the steamer Mohawk last night and after having supper at the Atlantic Hotel went to the Monticello Hotel to get Mr. Bigger, the clerk there, to make all the preliminary arrangements for us. We found Mr. Bigger sick in bed, though he really didn't understand what we wanted with him. Then I came here to the Gladstone Hotel."

WILD HUNT FOR PREACHER.
"Jean hired a cab and started out to get a license. This was nearly midnight, and getting tired I went to sleep on a sofa in the parlor, while Della, poor girl, slept in a chair. Finally Jean came back and telephoned for a preacher at 2 o'clock, but the preacher would not get up. Then we went out together and were finally married by a preacher at his residence. I don't really know his name, but I do know we are married."

"Yes, because here's the certificate," said Mrs. Oakes, as he produced an elaborately ornamented piece of paper, to which she signed the name of Rev. J. Merritt as the officiating clergyman at the wedding of Jean Sullivan Oakes and Nellie P. Phoebus.

"Now, there is no need of saying I am divorced," said Mrs. Oakes, "because that would be useless. Everybody knows Nellie Phoebus, and everybody knows she is divorced. I don't want to say, either, that one minister refused to marry us because I was a divorced woman. That is all unnecessary and shouldn't go with the story."

VERY HAPPY.
"You can tell the people for me that I am tickled sick. I am very happy, and that's all. Jean spent out last night, and we have telegraphed for money. When it comes we are going away this evening. A telegraph money order for $15 reached the happy couple this afternoon."

Mr. Oakes said he was formerly in the United States army, having resigned under a cloud recently, but that he would soon be back as an artillery lieutenant. Continuing he said: "I am now the owner of the old Buckroe Beach Hotel, and after two weeks spent at Atlantic City we will return to Buckroe to live."

"No, no, Jean," said Mrs. Oakes, "you know I won't live at Buckroe, and I just will not live at Phoebus, either. I am going to continue to live in Hampton, but the second said he would not issue the license. Then the third man got up at 2 o'clock, came to his office, and we got the license. The preachers were almost as bad. Rev. C. L. Lane, of the Cumberland Street Methodist church, refused to marry us when he found Nellie was divorced, and then we had to go on. Rev. Mr. Merritt, the Seamen's chaplain, invited us in and we were married at his home. It's all over now. You can tell the folks I am very happy; that's enough."

Della Yeager, who sat on the side of an iron bedstead by Mrs. Oakes, with her chin buried in her hands, said she was tired and wanted to go back home.

"Yes," said Mrs. Oakes, "the maid of honor is worn out and wants to get back."

"Is Miss Yeager in charge of Mr. Oakes' Buckroe Hotel?" asked the reporter.

"No," said Mrs. Oakes, with a broad smile; "she is stopping at the Chamberlin Hotel. You see?" Della was the chaperone last night.

KILLED HIS RIVAL.
Negro Commits Murder and Takes a Nap at the Depot.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)
LA CROSSE, Va., Sept. 19.—Willie Williams shot and instantly killed John Wright (both colored), near Shelton, Sunday. Wright jerked a letter out of a woman's hand and in doing so, jerked her down. Williams was in love with the woman and invited Wright out, as supposed, to have a talk, and they went to the woods, as soon as out of sight, Williams drew his pistol and pumped three balls into Wright, killing him at once.

Willie Williams is still at large and brought a ticket here for Henderson, N.C. boarded the Seaboard train, No. 31. Williams had plenty of nerve; he came to the station about one hour before the train was due, at 12:31, and bought his ticket, and then lay down in waiting-room and went to sleep to await his train. Whiskey was used freely by all concerned.

HAMPDEN-SIDNEY.
Opens With Large Number of Students Coming in.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)
HAMPDEN-SIDNEY, Va., September 19.—Hampden-Sidney College entered upon her one hundred and twenty-ninth session last Thursday. The recent improvements about the campus and grounds are matters of favorable comment.

For the past few days, registering and classification of the students have been going on.

The freshman class is a large one, and the number may exceed that of last year. Of the old boys, ten percent came from the usual one. A large number of the alumni are on the grounds. Their usual time for coming is the first week of the year, but there are almost as many here as there were at any time during the last year.

Football and the prospect for a good team are being discussed, and there appears to be good material among the freshmen. Of the good material among the freshmen, Edmonds, Humberger, Egan and Wilson are back, besides a number of the second team. Last night the annual reception of the Young Men's Christian Association was held. On next Friday night some of the young ladies of the community expect to give a dance at "Glenora" cottage.

FEMININE MASONS.
Danville Commercial to Give a Reception and Banquet.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)
DANVILLE, Va., September 19.—A recent meeting of the Danville Lodge of Masons, steps were taken looking to the establishment of a chapter of the order in this city. The principal object of the order in this State is to assist in building up the Masonic home.

The Commercial Association will tender a reception to the ladies of the order, to which ladies and gentlemen from the surrounding towns and cities will be invited. The entertainment will be given in the evening at the Danville Commercial Hotel. Half a hundred young girls have been named on the various committees, which are composed entirely of ladies.

RALLY AT CULPEPER.
Messrs. Swanson, Rixey and Carlin Make Speeches.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)
CULPEPER, Va., Sept. 19.—Congressman Claude A. Swanson and John P. Rixey and Mr. Carlin, of Alexandria, spoke here today in the interest of the Democratic national and congressional tickets. There was a large crowd to hear them in the open house. While Roosevelt seemed to be the chief topic with the speakers, Mr. Swanson devoted most of his time to a discussion of the tariff from a Democratic platform standpoint. All of the speakers elicited applause and the time passed off quickly.

Buckingham Schools.
(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)
ARLINGTON, Va., September 19.—The Marshall district school board met in the Arlington school building Saturday and elected teachers for the district. Mr. Walter H. Hundley, son of Judge George J. Hundley, was elected principal of the Arlington school. Miss Sue C. Boyd, of Nelson county, was named first assistant, and Miss Sidney Brooks, second assistant.

Miss Kate Flanagan was elected principal of the New Canton school, and Miss Mary Pones, principal of the school at Buckingham Church.

The schools of the district will begin on Monday, October 24.

Runaway at Frederick's Hall.
(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)
FREDERICK'S HALL, Va., September 19.—While driving near here last night about 10 o'clock, the horse of John and Mrs. B. A. Terrell took fright and ran about a quarter of a mile. Both Dr. and Mrs. Terrell were bruised, while the buggy is a total wreck, and the horse is terribly cut from running into a wire fence.

An Elopement.
(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)
HEATISVILLE, Va., Sept. 19.—Mr. John Arum and Miss Ida H. Reamy eloped Friday for Baltimore. Much surprise was created when the news was brought here. Mr. Arum, it seems, had been in love with the girl for some time, but her father would not give his consent to the marriage. Both parties are well known here, each residing within a few miles of this place.

Supreme Court of Appeals.
(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)
STAUNTON, Va., September 19.—In the Supreme Court to-day, the case of John A. Carter et al. vs. Stewart M. Wood, from the Circuit Court of Craig county, was argued by William A. Anderson, attorney-general for the plaintiff in error and Hon. James W. Marshall, of New Castle for the defendant in error and submitted.

The case of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway Company vs. George A. Pierce from the Circuit Court of Alleghany county was argued in part this morning and to-morrow morning for a further hearing. The argument was opened in the case by R. L. Parrish, Esq., of Covington, Va.

Pemberton-Dickinson.
(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)
FREDERICKSBURG, Va., Sept. 19.—Mr. John Pemberton, of Loudoun county, and Miss Lottie Dickinson, of Loudoun county, were married last week at the Methodist church at Loudoun Court-house.

Wills-Clark.
BEACH, Va., September 19.—Mr. Pearl Wells and Miss Maggie Bertha Clark were married Wednesday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Wells. Rev. George W. Watkins performed the ceremony. The bride is the daughter of Mrs. O. A. Payne and her bridesmaids, Mr. Fred Wells and Mr. Lucius Clark acted as best men.

NEW season makes its bow. The past seasons have brought progress—in ideas—in management and in selection of appropriate merchandise—artistic stocks, which leading stores should carry. What we have done in the past should be a criterion of what we shall do. We have labored incessantly to merit the high standard which this elegant store now bears.

Wedding Gifts of Quality.

The announcing of fall brides is heard in every ear. Friends are buying themselves about what to give. No need to worry. Come here and inspect the complete line of Sterling Silverware, Cut-Glass, Novelties, that can be found in the South—and our prices will surely please you.

Schwarzschilda Bros.

Second and Broad Streets.

LARGE TERRAPIN FARM DESTROYED

Further Reports of the Devastation of Last Week's Storm.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)
ONANCOCK, Va., Sept. 19.—The telegraph wires to the outside world and the local telephone connections have never been restored since the terrible wind storm of Wednesday night.

The loss to those living on the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries is great. The highest losses seem to be Mr. Frank C. Lewis, of Hunting Creek, who has his large terrapin ponds destroyed, and Mr. Lewis is one of the largest breeders of the diamond-back terrapin in the United States, and annually furnishes hundreds of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The terrapins are put in still water ponds fenced in by a marsh and land, their eggs in the sand. They breed very fast, and when the industry is conducted on a large scale it proves most profitable. The huge tide came over the ponds and tossed the terrapins on the choppy sea so that they finally became exhausted. When a terrapin was washed along it usually landed on its back, and the tossing waves exhausted the animal's vitality. Mr. Lewis also had his wharf property washed away, and the loss of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The loss to those living on the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries is great. The highest losses seem to be Mr. Frank C. Lewis, of Hunting Creek, who has his large terrapin ponds destroyed, and Mr. Lewis is one of the largest breeders of the diamond-back terrapin in the United States, and annually furnishes hundreds of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The terrapins are put in still water ponds fenced in by a marsh and land, their eggs in the sand. They breed very fast, and when the industry is conducted on a large scale it proves most profitable. The huge tide came over the ponds and tossed the terrapins on the choppy sea so that they finally became exhausted. When a terrapin was washed along it usually landed on its back, and the tossing waves exhausted the animal's vitality. Mr. Lewis also had his wharf property washed away, and the loss of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The loss to those living on the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries is great. The highest losses seem to be Mr. Frank C. Lewis, of Hunting Creek, who has his large terrapin ponds destroyed, and Mr. Lewis is one of the largest breeders of the diamond-back terrapin in the United States, and annually furnishes hundreds of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The terrapins are put in still water ponds fenced in by a marsh and land, their eggs in the sand. They breed very fast, and when the industry is conducted on a large scale it proves most profitable. The huge tide came over the ponds and tossed the terrapins on the choppy sea so that they finally became exhausted. When a terrapin was washed along it usually landed on its back, and the tossing waves exhausted the animal's vitality. Mr. Lewis also had his wharf property washed away, and the loss of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The loss to those living on the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries is great. The highest losses seem to be Mr. Frank C. Lewis, of Hunting Creek, who has his large terrapin ponds destroyed, and Mr. Lewis is one of the largest breeders of the diamond-back terrapin in the United States, and annually furnishes hundreds of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The terrapins are put in still water ponds fenced in by a marsh and land, their eggs in the sand. They breed very fast, and when the industry is conducted on a large scale it proves most profitable. The huge tide came over the ponds and tossed the terrapins on the choppy sea so that they finally became exhausted. When a terrapin was washed along it usually landed on its back, and the tossing waves exhausted the animal's vitality. Mr. Lewis also had his wharf property washed away, and the loss of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The loss to those living on the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries is great. The highest losses seem to be Mr. Frank C. Lewis, of Hunting Creek, who has his large terrapin ponds destroyed, and Mr. Lewis is one of the largest breeders of the diamond-back terrapin in the United States, and annually furnishes hundreds of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The terrapins are put in still water ponds fenced in by a marsh and land, their eggs in the sand. They breed very fast, and when the industry is conducted on a large scale it proves most profitable. The huge tide came over the ponds and tossed the terrapins on the choppy sea so that they finally became exhausted. When a terrapin was washed along it usually landed on its back, and the tossing waves exhausted the animal's vitality. Mr. Lewis also had his wharf property washed away, and the loss of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The loss to those living on the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries is great. The highest losses seem to be Mr. Frank C. Lewis, of Hunting Creek, who has his large terrapin ponds destroyed, and Mr. Lewis is one of the largest breeders of the diamond-back terrapin in the United States, and annually furnishes hundreds of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The terrapins are put in still water ponds fenced in by a marsh and land, their eggs in the sand. They breed very fast, and when the industry is conducted on a large scale it proves most profitable. The huge tide came over the ponds and tossed the terrapins on the choppy sea so that they finally became exhausted. When a terrapin was washed along it usually landed on its back, and the tossing waves exhausted the animal's vitality. Mr. Lewis also had his wharf property washed away, and the loss of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The loss to those living on the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries is great. The highest losses seem to be Mr. Frank C. Lewis, of Hunting Creek, who has his large terrapin ponds destroyed, and Mr. Lewis is one of the largest breeders of the diamond-back terrapin in the United States, and annually furnishes hundreds of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The terrapins are put in still water ponds fenced in by a marsh and land, their eggs in the sand. They breed very fast, and when the industry is conducted on a large scale it proves most profitable. The huge tide came over the ponds and tossed the terrapins on the choppy sea so that they finally became exhausted. When a terrapin was washed along it usually landed on its back, and the tossing waves exhausted the animal's vitality. Mr. Lewis also had his wharf property washed away, and the loss of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The loss to those living on the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries is great. The highest losses seem to be Mr. Frank C. Lewis, of Hunting Creek, who has his large terrapin ponds destroyed, and Mr. Lewis is one of the largest breeders of the diamond-back terrapin in the United States, and annually furnishes hundreds of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The terrapins are put in still water ponds fenced in by a marsh and land, their eggs in the sand. They breed very fast, and when the industry is conducted on a large scale it proves most profitable. The huge tide came over the ponds and tossed the terrapins on the choppy sea so that they finally became exhausted. When a terrapin was washed along it usually landed on its back, and the tossing waves exhausted the animal's vitality. Mr. Lewis also had his wharf property washed away, and the loss of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The loss to those living on the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries is great. The highest losses seem to be Mr. Frank C. Lewis, of Hunting Creek, who has his large terrapin ponds destroyed, and Mr. Lewis is one of the largest breeders of the diamond-back terrapin in the United States, and annually furnishes hundreds of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The terrapins are put in still water ponds fenced in by a marsh and land, their eggs in the sand. They breed very fast, and when the industry is conducted on a large scale it proves most profitable. The huge tide came over the ponds and tossed the terrapins on the choppy sea so that they finally became exhausted. When a terrapin was washed along it usually landed on its back, and the tossing waves exhausted the animal's vitality. Mr. Lewis also had his wharf property washed away, and the loss of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The loss to those living on the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries is great. The highest losses seem to be Mr. Frank C. Lewis, of Hunting Creek, who has his large terrapin ponds destroyed, and Mr. Lewis is one of the largest breeders of the diamond-back terrapin in the United States, and annually furnishes hundreds of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The terrapins are put in still water ponds fenced in by a marsh and land, their eggs in the sand. They breed very fast, and when the industry is conducted on a large scale it proves most profitable. The huge tide came over the ponds and tossed the terrapins on the choppy sea so that they finally became exhausted. When a terrapin was washed along it usually landed on its back, and the tossing waves exhausted the animal's vitality. Mr. Lewis also had his wharf property washed away, and the loss of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The loss to those living on the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries is great. The highest losses seem to be Mr. Frank C. Lewis, of Hunting Creek, who has his large terrapin ponds destroyed, and Mr. Lewis is one of the largest breeders of the diamond-back terrapin in the United States, and annually furnishes hundreds of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The terrapins are put in still water ponds fenced in by a marsh and land, their eggs in the sand. They breed very fast, and when the industry is conducted on a large scale it proves most profitable. The huge tide came over the ponds and tossed the terrapins on the choppy sea so that they finally became exhausted. When a terrapin was washed along it usually landed on its back, and the tossing waves exhausted the animal's vitality. Mr. Lewis also had his wharf property washed away, and the loss of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The loss to those living on the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries is great. The highest losses seem to be Mr. Frank C. Lewis, of Hunting Creek, who has his large terrapin ponds destroyed, and Mr. Lewis is one of the largest breeders of the diamond-back terrapin in the United States, and annually furnishes hundreds of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The terrapins are put in still water ponds fenced in by a marsh and land, their eggs in the sand. They breed very fast, and when the industry is conducted on a large scale it proves most profitable. The huge tide came over the ponds and tossed the terrapins on the choppy sea so that they finally became exhausted. When a terrapin was washed along it usually landed on its back, and the tossing waves exhausted the animal's vitality. Mr. Lewis also had his wharf property washed away, and the loss of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The loss to those living on the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries is great. The highest losses seem to be Mr. Frank C. Lewis, of Hunting Creek, who has his large terrapin ponds destroyed, and Mr. Lewis is one of the largest breeders of the diamond-back terrapin in the United States, and annually furnishes hundreds of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The terrapins are put in still water ponds fenced in by a marsh and land, their eggs in the sand. They breed very fast, and when the industry is conducted on a large scale it proves most profitable. The huge tide came over the ponds and tossed the terrapins on the choppy sea so that they finally became exhausted. When a terrapin was washed along it usually landed on its back, and the tossing waves exhausted the animal's vitality. Mr. Lewis also had his wharf property washed away, and the loss of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The loss to those living on the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries is great. The highest losses seem to be Mr. Frank C. Lewis, of Hunting Creek, who has his large terrapin ponds destroyed, and Mr. Lewis is one of the largest breeders of the diamond-back terrapin in the United States, and annually furnishes hundreds of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The terrapins are put in still water ponds fenced in by a marsh and land, their eggs in the sand. They breed very fast, and when the industry is conducted on a large scale it proves most profitable. The huge tide came over the ponds and tossed the terrapins on the choppy sea so that they finally became exhausted. When a terrapin was washed along it usually landed on its back, and the tossing waves exhausted the animal's vitality. Mr. Lewis also had his wharf property washed away, and the loss of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The loss to those living on the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries is great. The highest losses seem to be Mr. Frank C. Lewis, of Hunting Creek, who has his large terrapin ponds destroyed, and Mr. Lewis is one of the largest breeders of the diamond-back terrapin in the United States, and annually furnishes hundreds of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The terrapins are put in still water ponds fenced in by a marsh and land, their eggs in the sand. They breed very fast, and when the industry is conducted on a large scale it proves most profitable. The huge tide came over the ponds and tossed the terrapins on the choppy sea so that they finally became exhausted. When a terrapin was washed along it usually landed on its back, and the tossing waves exhausted the animal's vitality. Mr. Lewis also had his wharf property washed away, and the loss of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The loss to those living on the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries is great. The highest losses seem to be Mr. Frank C. Lewis, of Hunting Creek, who has his large terrapin ponds destroyed, and Mr. Lewis is one of the largest breeders of the diamond-back terrapin in the United States, and annually furnishes hundreds of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The terrapins are put in still water ponds fenced in by a marsh and land, their eggs in the sand. They breed very fast, and when the industry is conducted on a large scale it proves most profitable. The huge tide came over the ponds and tossed the terrapins on the choppy sea so that they finally became exhausted. When a terrapin was washed along it usually landed on its back, and the tossing waves exhausted the animal's vitality. Mr. Lewis also had his wharf property washed away, and the loss of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The loss to those living on the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries is great. The highest losses seem to be Mr. Frank C. Lewis, of Hunting Creek, who has his large terrapin ponds destroyed, and Mr. Lewis is one of the largest breeders of the diamond-back terrapin in the United States, and annually furnishes hundreds of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The terrapins are put in still water ponds fenced in by a marsh and land, their eggs in the sand. They breed very fast, and when the industry is conducted on a large scale it proves most profitable. The huge tide came over the ponds and tossed the terrapins on the choppy sea so that they finally became exhausted. When a terrapin was washed along it usually landed on its back, and the tossing waves exhausted the animal's vitality. Mr. Lewis also had his wharf property washed away, and the loss of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The loss to those living on the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries is great. The highest losses seem to be Mr. Frank C. Lewis, of Hunting Creek, who has his large terrapin ponds destroyed, and Mr. Lewis is one of the largest breeders of the diamond-back terrapin in the United States, and annually furnishes hundreds of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The terrapins are put in still water ponds fenced in by a marsh and land, their eggs in the sand. They breed very fast, and when the industry is conducted on a large scale it proves most profitable. The huge tide came over the ponds and tossed the terrapins on the choppy sea so that they finally became exhausted. When a terrapin was washed along it usually landed on its back, and the tossing waves exhausted the animal's vitality. Mr. Lewis also had his wharf property washed away, and the loss of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The loss to those living on the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries is great. The highest losses seem to be Mr. Frank C. Lewis, of Hunting Creek, who has his large terrapin ponds destroyed, and Mr. Lewis is one of the largest breeders of the diamond-back terrapin in the United States, and annually furnishes hundreds of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The terrapins are put in still water ponds fenced in by a marsh and land, their eggs in the sand. They breed very fast, and when the industry is conducted on a large scale it proves most profitable. The huge tide came over the ponds and tossed the terrapins on the choppy sea so that they finally became exhausted. When a terrapin was washed along it usually landed on its back, and the tossing waves exhausted the animal's vitality. Mr. Lewis also had his wharf property washed away, and the loss of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The loss to those living on the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries is great. The highest losses seem to be Mr. Frank C. Lewis, of Hunting Creek, who has his large terrapin ponds destroyed, and Mr. Lewis is one of the largest breeders of the diamond-back terrapin in the United States, and annually furnishes hundreds of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The terrapins are put in still water ponds fenced in by a marsh and land, their eggs in the sand. They breed very fast, and when the industry is conducted on a large scale it proves most profitable. The huge tide came over the ponds and tossed the terrapins on the choppy sea so that they finally became exhausted. When a terrapin was washed along it usually landed on its back, and the tossing waves exhausted the animal's vitality. Mr. Lewis also had his wharf property washed away, and the loss of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The loss to those living on the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries is great. The highest losses seem to be Mr. Frank C. Lewis, of Hunting Creek, who has his large terrapin ponds destroyed, and Mr. Lewis is one of the largest breeders of the diamond-back terrapin in the United States, and annually furnishes hundreds of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The terrapins are put in still water ponds fenced in by a marsh and land, their eggs in the sand. They breed very fast, and when the industry is conducted on a large scale it proves most profitable. The huge tide came over the ponds and tossed the terrapins on the choppy sea so that they finally became exhausted. When a terrapin was washed along it usually landed on its back, and the tossing waves exhausted the animal's vitality. Mr. Lewis also had his wharf property washed away, and the loss of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The loss to those living on the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries is great. The highest losses seem to be Mr. Frank C. Lewis, of Hunting Creek, who has his large terrapin ponds destroyed, and Mr. Lewis is one of the largest breeders of the diamond-back terrapin in the United States, and annually furnishes hundreds of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The terrapins are put in still water ponds fenced in by a marsh and land, their eggs in the sand. They breed very fast, and when the industry is conducted on a large scale it proves most profitable. The huge tide came over the ponds and tossed the terrapins on the choppy sea so that they finally became exhausted. When a terrapin was washed along it usually landed on its back, and the tossing waves exhausted the animal's vitality. Mr. Lewis also had his wharf property washed away, and the loss of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The loss to those living on the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries is great. The highest losses seem to be Mr. Frank C. Lewis, of Hunting Creek, who has his large terrapin ponds destroyed, and Mr. Lewis is one of the largest breeders of the diamond-back terrapin in the United States, and annually furnishes hundreds of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The terrapins are put in still water ponds fenced in by a marsh and land, their eggs in the sand. They breed very fast, and when the industry is conducted on a large scale it proves most profitable. The huge tide came over the ponds and tossed the terrapins on the choppy sea so that they finally became exhausted. When a terrapin was washed along it usually landed on its back, and the tossing waves exhausted the animal's vitality. Mr. Lewis also had his wharf property washed away, and the loss of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The loss to those living on the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries is great. The highest losses seem to be Mr. Frank C. Lewis, of Hunting Creek, who has his large terrapin ponds destroyed, and Mr. Lewis is one of the largest breeders of the diamond-back terrapin in the United States, and annually furnishes hundreds of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The terrapins are put in still water ponds fenced in by a marsh and land, their eggs in the sand. They breed very fast, and when the industry is conducted on a large scale it proves most profitable. The huge tide came over the ponds and tossed the terrapins on the choppy sea so that they finally became exhausted. When a terrapin was washed along it usually landed on its back, and the tossing waves exhausted the animal's vitality. Mr. Lewis also had his wharf property washed away, and the loss of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The loss to those living on the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries is great. The highest losses seem to be Mr. Frank C. Lewis, of Hunting Creek, who has his large terrapin ponds destroyed, and Mr. Lewis is one of the largest breeders of the diamond-back terrapin in the United States, and annually furnishes hundreds of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The terrapins are put in still water ponds fenced in by a marsh and land, their eggs in the sand. They breed very fast, and when the industry is conducted on a large scale it proves most profitable. The huge tide came over the ponds and tossed the terrapins on the choppy sea so that they finally became exhausted. When a terrapin was washed along it usually landed on its back, and the tossing waves exhausted the animal's vitality. Mr. Lewis also had his wharf property washed away, and the loss of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The loss to those living on the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries is great. The highest losses seem to be Mr. Frank C. Lewis, of Hunting Creek, who has his large terrapin ponds destroyed, and Mr. Lewis is one of the largest breeders of the diamond-back terrapin in the United States, and annually furnishes hundreds of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The terrapins are put in still water ponds fenced in by a marsh and land, their eggs in the sand. They breed very fast, and when the industry is conducted on a large scale it proves most profitable. The huge tide came over the ponds and tossed the terrapins on the choppy sea so that they finally became exhausted. When a terrapin was washed along it usually landed on its back, and the tossing waves exhausted the animal's vitality. Mr. Lewis also had his wharf property washed away, and the loss of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The loss to those living on the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries is great. The highest losses seem to be Mr. Frank C. Lewis, of Hunting Creek, who has his large terrapin ponds destroyed, and Mr. Lewis is one of the largest breeders of the diamond-back terrapin in the United States, and annually furnishes hundreds of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The terrapins are put in still water ponds fenced in by a marsh and land, their eggs in the sand. They breed very fast, and when the industry is conducted on a large scale it proves most profitable. The huge tide came over the ponds and tossed the terrapins on the choppy sea so that they finally became exhausted. When a terrapin was washed along it usually landed on its back, and the tossing waves exhausted the animal's vitality. Mr. Lewis also had his wharf property washed away, and the loss of the most scarce delicacy to the large restaurants scattered over this broad land.

The loss to those living on the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries is great. The highest losses seem to be Mr. Frank C. Lewis, of Hunting Creek, who has his large terrapin ponds destroyed, and Mr. Lewis is one of the largest breeders of